General Commentary

Global markets have begun the Australian financial year on a positive note, with the MSCI World Index advancing over 9% as economic news flow was relatively benign and corporate earnings on the whole satisfied market participants.

Disappointingly, while some of our portfolio holdings performed in-line with or even substantially better than the broad market, these gains were overwhelmed by unrealised losses on other holdings resulting in a small decline in the value of your portfolio over the quarter.

Significant positive contributors over the quarter were BP, Fairfax Financial and Pre Paid Legal Services, with each appreciating 42%, 10% and 32% respectively. The main laggard was one of our larger holdings Asta Funding. Its shares fell 22% over the quarter, giving up most of the previous quarter's gains and marking the stock back down to levels that we feel offer unusually attractive upside potential with limited downside risk.

Portfolio Commentary

Activity was driven by both repositioning of a number of our holdings as well as the elimination of Pre Paid Legal Services from the portfolio and the introduction of Wells Fargo.

On the rebalancing front, we took advantage of price strength in both BP and Berkshire Hathaway to reduce our weightings in these positions. At their higher prices we aren't as enthused as we had previously been, but we believe these stocks continue to offer value and thus have retained more modest positions. Having gained 20% the previous quarter, Pre Paid

Legal continued its rally, rising a further 32% from the beginning of the quarter to where we ultimately exited this stock as our appraisal of full value was reached. We're very happy with how Pre Paid Legal has played out in the portfolio over the past year or so and while we believe the company will probably do quite well over time, its stock has been marked to a level that no longer interests us from an investment perspective.

On the other side of the ledger, we took advantage of price weakness in each of Iron Mountain and Johnson & Johnson to increase our exposures to these high quality names. Each of these companies has suffered from what we believe has been an overreaction to modestly negative news (Johnson & Johnson, for example, having its image tainted by a spate of product recalls) but the degree to which these justified concerns have been discounted into their respective stock prices we feel makes them particularly attractive.

Additionally, having followed the company for quite some time through the global financial crisis and subsequent recovery/stabilisation, we have initiated a small position in a leading US bank, Wells Fargo, which is priced attractively relative to what we believe is its long-term normalised earnings profile. It acquired Wachovia Bank in late 2008 and that integration continues. The requisite synergies that are springing from that acquisition coupled with their competitive advantage of having the lowest cost of deposits among its major competitors, Wells Fargo appears well positioned as the economic environment improves.

2010 September Peters MacGregor Global Fund

In considering the potential to add any new company to the portfolio we assess not only the risk/return profile of the individual name but also how that company will affect the risk/return profile of the overall portfolio. We are very pleased with changes made over this quarter which we feel enhance the quality mix of the portfolio overall while maintaining strong cash balances in order to manage risk and be in a position where we can move swiftly on new opportunities. Reducing exposure to stocks that approach full valuation and adding to those whose value proposition have increased both lowers the inherent portfolio risk and improve the return profile.

Conclusion

While we are disappointed with our portfolio performance over the quarter, both in an absolute and relative sense, we believe that the combination of prices falling, in some cases to levels that are highly prospective, together with the portfolio adjustments we have made has increased the attractiveness of the portfolio as a whole. Modest increases in our cash holdings as a result of a sell/reduce bias over the quarter are welcome in an environment in which we continue to be cautious, though we do look forward to putting capital to work in ideas that make sense on a case by case basis after considering how any new holding will fit within the existing portfolio from a risk management perspective.
